WILLIAM McFEE

HE WAS A MAN

By Rose Wilder Lane

(Third printing now ready)

IN a long review in the New York Sun, William McFee says:
"Only a deep appreciation of a living man could inspire so fine a book. It is a novel, and a very fine novel into the bargain.

"It will appeal inevitably to two classes of readers. Those to whom Jack London's career is a symbol of the American spirit will read it for the pathos. And those who never heard of the man will find the book a noble theme, nobly treated, a tragedy of a man who struggled and loved, and, in the eyes of his time, succeeded beyond his own dreams."

"He Was a Man" seems to be the most important American novel of the Spring. When two such diverse but competent critics as Floyd Dell and William McFee unite in the highest praise of a book its success is assured.

Fishing—What Books and When

By Charles E. Rush

Librarian of Indianapolis Public Library

EVEN the heading on this story of fishing books appears a bit fishy. Compare it with the attractive advertisement of a certain Hoosier tackle firm. To tell the truth, for which all good fishermen are famous, the whole subject may be so described. It is characteristic.

What books? Well—all of them. Did you ever hear of a poor fishing book? Naturally not. Being written by fishermen of veracity they reflect their authors' qualifications. Furthermore, age matters little. A thirty year old book on ichthyic problems sells and reads as well today as then. Like their subject they never grow old—witness the “Compleat Angler” himself.

When? Now, anytime, all the time! Book fishing is good the whole year round. It is “legal” each day in the year. There is no closed season. Fishing in books is as entrancing in September at the close of one’s vacation as it is in April when the fish worm sings in the gloaming. Bookish anglers will bite anytime.

You are quite right. There is a surprising amount of literature on the subject. The same is true of flower gardening, poultry, vegetable gardening and cooking, but there are few unused, unwanted or unappreciated books in any of these subjects. The principal provocation is that most of our bookstores and libraries are indifferently neglectful of their slender stock to the disadvantage of themselves and their patrons as well.

The old saying about the joys of anticipation applies more to a fisherman than any other class of hobbiests, unless it be the amateur gardener pouring over a seed catalog. But any person who dreams of the out-of-doors also dreams when he can bring the out-of-doors in-doors. And many of us in the business of telling the world of the joys of books sadly neglect that person at times.

Above all others he will want, if he knows well his angling lore, a copy of Jordan and Evermann’s “American Food and Game Fishes,” the leading ichthyic encyclopedia and gospel which scientifically classifies all of the finny tribe. This is a book for first purchase in any private library on the subject—the authority to which all doubting Thomases finally resort.

Surely all anglers will agree with me on selecting next the “Book of the Black Bass” by the Grand Old Man of Fishing, Dr. James A. Henshall, first published in 1881 and now appearing in a new edition. This book is a delightful scientific life history of “inch for inch, and pound for pound, the gamest fish that swims.” Authoritative information—delightful presentation. The same is true of his “Bass, Pike and Perch.”

Then all in one breath must be mentioned the always happy and dependable O. W. Smith, fishing editor of Outdoor

Life and author of several angling works famous among fishermen—“Trout Lore,” “The Book of the Pike,” “Casting Tackle and Methods,” and “The Book of Live Bait Fishing.”

Three other good bass books are: “Black Bass and Bass Craft” by Sheridan R. Jones, “The Small-mouthed Bass” by W. J. Loudon and Louis Rhead’s “The Basses, Fresh Water and Marine.” These three are sources of delight to all fishermen and quite necessary for all angling collectors.

Two exceptionally good books on instruction in methods of fishing and variety of tackle are St. John’s “Practical Fly Fishing” and “Practical Bait Casting.” They remind us of two other good small guide books, “Fishing Kits and Equipment” and “The Fine Art of Fishing,” by Samuel G. Camp.

Then along comes Dixie Carroll with his gossipy conversation, out-door spirit and fishing secrets in “Goin’ Fishin’,” “Lake and Stream Fishing” and “Fishing Tackle and Kits.” He is always the incomparable Dixie Carroil.

There are dozens of others, both charming and informing, on as many different specialties. Surf fishing, dry-fly casting, tales of big fish, fishermen’s lures, rod making, adventures in angling, stream insects and as many more indicate only a few of the subjects treated by Holden, Van Dyke, Heilner, Shaw, Frazer, Gill, Clapham, Ronalds, and other authoritative writers.

The sport of angling and its lore increase in interest each year. Perhaps the most popular fish, the bass, is only about 100 years old, scientifically, but the family is now broadcast thruout the earth, and everywhere real sportsmen carry the invisible banner “plant a bass before you die.” However, since the days of Izaak Walton (don’t fail to see the new edition of the “Compleat Angler” illustrated by James Thrope) these real fishermen have sought to dispel the popular notion of the uninitiated that—

“He baits his hook

With a rabbit’s tail

And sits on the dock

And bobs for whale.”

Books for Graduation

By Margaret Donnan

THE only high school graduation present I remember now, after more than twenty years, is my copy of Browning's "Complete Poems" in the thin paper Cambridge edition. All the jewelry and fashionable gim-cracks have long since been lost and forgotten, but the book has been an unfading joy. I never take it down from the shelf without reading again the inscription written by an elderly friend of my mother's: "To M. D., in remembrance of the great pleasure she gave me on June 8, 1898." You will hardly believe that the donor refers to the pleasure she got from hearing my graduation essay spoken by heart from the platform of one of the theaters, the subject a comparison between a heroine of Shakespeare and of Tennyson, Portia and the Princess, I believe they were. It was truly a case where the excellence lay in the ear of the listener. Whenever I take down the book, I seem to myself for a moment the frightened but proud red-haired girl, saying my piece mechanically and picking out friends in the audience with most of my mind and attention. I enjoy again the tucked organdie dress, the pricking of a bigger armful of American Beauty roses than I have ever seen since, and the Christmas-y feeling left over from hearing the doorbell rung all day by people with presents. The retrospective pleasure this Browning has given me in addition to what has come from the poems themselves is the best argument I know for giving young people books for graduating presents.

Hazlitt and Lamb both have charmingly testified to this kind of retrospective pleasure. Lamb loved the dog-eared pages of long-owned books and the familiar grease-spots on certain of their pages, the sight of which brought back to him particular evenings spent by the sea coal fire with his pipe and the book. Hazlitt says when he reads again his old musty copy of "Tom Jones," he feels himself the same person he was at the age of fifteen when he first read it. Twenty years drop off his back and he is a child again in his father's house when his path ran down with butter and honey. Books like this are "landmarks on the way thru life, pegs on which we hang up or take down the wardrobe of moral imaginations; they are tokens of happier hours." It ought to be a great privilege to give to young people books when they graduate that some day will be able to awaken such memories for them.

Of course, books appropriate for graduation presents, then, ought by all means to be the kind of books that the possessor is sure to want to read again and again later in his life. And there are hundreds of these "books of all time" that will appeal to boys and girls of the graduating age. Sets of Dickens and Jane Austen and Shakespeare if they like those authors. If they like "Jane Eyre," they will like one of the great biographies, the "Life of Charlotte Brontë" by Mrs. Gaskell. If they have cared for Scott, they will be happy to own the great Lockhart "Life of Scott." If they like poetry they will want complete editions of Wordsworth and Shelley and Keats and Byron. Many of them will delight in a leather copy of the "Oxford Book of English Verse," or de la Mare's "Come Hither" or Burton Stevenson's "Home Book of Verse." Books like "Moby Dick" and Plutarch's "Lives" and "Pilgrims' Progress" is clear attractive-looking type, since they are so often found badly and forbiddingly printed, are good ones to give. And then there is Milton. I have a particularly soft spot for my own copy of Milton with its mottled green and gold cover and leather corners. It was given to me when I was christened and joined the church at the discriminating age of twelve by an aunt who was widely known to be somewhat scornful of church connections herself. It has been a source of pleasure to me for many years and for equally as many a source of wonder as to why she gave me a present at all on an occasion with which she must have had little sympathy. Any excuse for giving a young niece a good book is the explanation, I suspect.

The English custom of giving books as public school prizes is an excellent one, it seems to me, and one which we would do well to imitate. I should think school principals and patrons who are really especially interested in scholarship and school patrons who would like to acknowledge their happiness in the literary attainments of pupils in their pet schools would enjoy becoming donors of certain book prizes in every school year. It would not take a large initial gift to produce enough interest for purchasing one or two fine books to be given as annual prizes. I have been wondering lately, by the way, what those prize books were which John Keats won at school and which he carried, according to Miss Lowell's picture, under his arm that day he left Edmonton for good and started on his eight mile walk to his first London hospital.

Booksellers might do much good by promoting the school prize idea, I should think, suggesting always what editions of what books would make good prizes. And I should think, too, that if, at the "graduating" season, they would hang up in an easily accessible place in the shop a list of books classified as appropriate for grammar school or high school or college graduates, giving prices, they would earn the blessings of gift seekers.

Books as School Prizes

An Important Branch of English Publishing

By G. H. Grubb

of G. P. Putnam's Sons, London

BOOKS for school prizes or Reward Books as they are called in England, are an extremely important feature in British publishing. A great number of houses give very special attention to them. In fact, there are firms which probably devote more time and consideration to their "reward" publications than to the more general side of their business. It needs the closest study, for it is, nowadays, of a particularly competitive character. This keenness has grown up from a modest business in school prizes, to a volume business which forms a great portion in the year's publishing output. There was always a demand for Reward Books, or School Prizes, in proportion to the number of schools and colleges, which was, of course, largely determined by the size of the population. Nowadays, these books find their way, not only into the hands of successful scholars studying in schools and colleges of all grades, but they are distributed among the various Sunday schools.

Then, too, these publications are given as presents to young folk in the home. It is conceivable, and quite logical, that the trade in them will go on increasing, for these presentation books find favor in a hundred different directions. No bookseller's shop is ever seen without them. At least, any genuine bookshop. They always make a goodly splash of color upon the shelves. The general stores, too, deal very largely in them.

When one harks back fifty years, and looks at the reward books of those times, the difference in form is very pronounced. To-day they are works which please in every aspect. Naturally, a prize or reward book should be an especially pleasing volume. The boy or girl, who has been so happily successful in the examination, as to be entitled to a prize, gathers an additional joy if the prize is so attractive as to make a real appeal when it is placed in the hands of the triumphant young person. The joy in the contents will come later.

As may be obvious, this class of trade is pursued with the utmost efficiency, and has reached so high a standard of excellence, that further advance to a more perfect condition has naturally slowed down during the last few years. But it is being so constantly reviewed and investigated, and with so much expert knowledge, based upon years of experience on the part of those publishers who have become past-masters in this particular branch of publishing, that every little while, as the months go by, some new and additional improvement is effected which makes the book even more attractive. As far as possible, there is no increase in the average price. If a certain house can accomplish some manufacturing improvement, its line of reward books becomes the most popular for the time, but it is not long before the improvement becomes general; and the standard goes a point higher. The pupil reaps the benefit, and the publishers' profit is reduced by some fraction.

Manufacturing improvements are not the only consideration. The taste of scholars varies from decade to decade, altho there are always the old favorites—favorites with which American school boys and school girls are as familiar as the British boy and girl. New writers, too, leave no stone unturned to enter the field, tho it is doubtful if there is any really great writer of boys' and girls' stories today. Prizes must be of diverse character, for there are just as many temperaments among the youth of the world as there are among the grown-ups, and these young people are very exacting and critical. This is an aspect of this very special side of publishing, which calls for the most persistent vigilance.

We must not forget that the scholar looks forward to the prize-giving time. Every one of the students has a hope that a prize of some sort is coming his way. Even the lazy ones have a faint hope, but there is a consciousness that it is only the hard worker who is really going to win in the race. But the number of prizes make quite a respectable figure in these days. And when it is remembered how many schools and colleges there are in the British Empire, it will be easily realized that this special branch of publishing is of considerable importance.

Mention has been made of the keen competition, and it covers many of the important publishing concerns, such as Nelson, Nisbet, Frowde, Religious Tract Society, Sunday School Union, Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, Partidge, Hodder, Black, Blackie, Warne, Ward Lock, Low, Cassell. They all issue Reward Books by the old favorite authors, and are always placing on the markets, stories of every conceivable and suitable kind by authors who are beginning to establish themselves. Among the old favorites are Kingston, Hughes, Defoe, Collingwood, Molesworth, Macdonald, Henty, Mayne Reed, Marryat, Cooper, Meade, Alcott, Verne, Fenn, Ballantyne, Kingsley. All are well established with the boys and girls. The editions vary in published price from fourpence, which are just simple picture books, to six shillings each. The most popular prices range between two shillings and sixpence and five shillings.

The greatest possible care is devoted to the selection of books, because it is very definitely understood that the book which is given to a boy or girl may very surely have an effect upon the young life after it has reached maturity. All of us cherish the books which came our way in those days when life was very young and simple. And the masters and mistresses, the school and education committees, who make the selections, regard their responsibilities very closely ere they make their purchase from the booksellers who call upon them,—men of the highest intelligence and refinement,—or when they order direct from the firm. This class of selling calls for special training, experience and temperament.

Long before the period of prize giving comes, the orders are placed, and the consignments delivered. It will be understood that here is needed a comprehensive organization, for the orders come in from all parts of the British Empire, and the shipments are made either direct to the colleges and schools, or thru the publishers' branch office, or thru their agents. Lists of all kinds, elaborate and simple, are widely circulated. Advance copies are sent to authorities, and final copies distributed, for it is found that by these means, and very special advertisements in the Educational papers, good business results. In fact, the 'free list' is quite an extensive, and very helpful method indeed, towards affecting orders.

Six New Eastern Bookshops

IV

The Centaur Book Shop, Philadelphia

THE Centaur Book Shop in Philadelphia is one of the most interesting of the new bookshops, because, among the small special shops, it is one of the most specialized. Most small modern bookshops are different from the older "bookstore" in their concentration on recent books, on the special needs of their clientele, and often are further specialized by emphasis on some field of non-fiction—biography, travel, garden books, or children's books. The specialty of the Centaur Book Shop is first editions. The most important part of its stock is English and American first editions; it has a long mailing list of collectors; its clientele is conspicuously masculine; for among its customers there are ten men to every woman. Only at Christmas time is the store much patronized by women; then, they appear in search of general books and especially children's books.

The old houses have now all been taken over by literary and art clubs, inns and small shops. Camac Street itself has several small bookshops, the most notable of which is the Little Brick House.

The Centaur Book Shop occupies two rooms on the main floor of a remodeled brick house. A flight of steps leads from the street to the front door. The first room as one enters contains most of the first editions. Here, also, is the office of the shop in the far end of the room. Both rooms are papered in a plain tan paper. The shelves are dark. One is tempted to say that the style of the shop is mission, but the owners suggest that it would be better to call it impromptu. In the outer room a bright fire burns on the hearth.

The shop has exhibits of paintings and drawings from time to time; the work of Clinton Beagary is frequently shown. Mr. Beagary's motto seems to be, "Say It With Jazz." The shop has an unusual selection of modern magazines—English, German, French and Russian—as well as art magazines.

Twice a year the shop issues a broadside, listing English and American books, mostly modern, which are to be found in the shop. These broadsides are sent to the whole mailing list, both the list of those who are interested in first editions and the more general mailing list. Sometimes these broadsides are printed on hand-made paper and sometimes on very highly glazed paper of some bright color, green or orange.

Four times a year the shop puts out catalogs of modern first editions, two large catalogs and two small ones. The list of authors that are specially collected by the Centaur Book

The Centaur Book Shop was opened October 1st, 1921. It is conducted by Harold T. Mason and David Jester, with the assistance of Miss Mitchell, who looks after the files and the bills, and Oliver Langa, who has charge of the mailing and shipping. The Centaur Book Shop is on Chancellor Street between Philadelphia's famous Camac Street and Thirteenth Street. It is therefore but a step from the center of Philadelphia's shopping and hotel district. It is just around the corner from the St. James Hotel. Everyone knows Camac Street, described in a recent issue of the House Beautiful as "the greatest little street in the world."

This narrow and picturesque street, with its characteristically Philadelphian houses of red brick with white fronts, is the artistic center of Philadelphia.

INTERIOR OF THE CENTAUR BOOKSHOP, SHOWING SHELVES OF FIRST EDITIONS

Shop's customers is a long one, and probably only a few can be mentioned: Saltus, Crane, Joyce, Hergesheimer, Cabell, Hudson, Mencken, Lawrence, Norman Douglas, E. M. Forster (who has been in demand at the shop for years), Conrad, George Moore, Ronald Firbank, Aldous Huxley, Michael Arlen (a recent boom), Arthur Machen (altho the demand is falling off a little), Haldane Macfall (out of print since 1910), T. F. Powys, A. E. Coppard, Martin Armstrong, Forrest Reid, and M. P. Shiel.

The Centaur Press is an activity quite apart from the shop. Among its notable productions are Whitman's "Song of the Broad Ax," with woodcuts by Wharton H. Esherick, a limited edition of 375 copies with typography planned by Frederique Warde, and "Edgar Saltus: A Critical Study" by Samuel Loveman, with a bibliography by Harold T. Mason.

The Centaur Book Shop's bibliographies have included "H. L. Mencken" by Carroll Frey; "James Branch Cabell" by Guy Holt; "Stephen Crane" by Vincent Starrett; "Joseph Hergesheimer" by H. L. R. Swire; "Carl Van Vechten" by Scott Cunningham; "D. H. Lawrence" by E. D. McDonald. Of these, the bibliography on Lawrence is the largest, and Lawrence wrote for it a preface, "The Bad Side of Books."

The characteristic trade-mark of the Centaur Book Shop and a variation frequently used are given at the head of this article. The shop has always been especially interested in typography, and all its announcements, labels, stationery and bills are very lovely to look at.

I HOLD every man a debtor to his profession, from the which, as men of course do seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duty to endeavor themselves, by way of amends, to be a help and ornament thereunto.

Through Health to Happiness

THE slogan "Through Health to Happiness—Find It In Books" will be emphasized in many articles in the press, display cards and catalogs in connection with the general emphasis on health improvement backed by the National Association of Book Publishers, which will reach its climax on National Child Health Day on May 1st. The National Health Council is composed of fourteen important national health organizations, including such groups as American Red Cross, American Child Health Association and the United States Public Health Service. The Council has asked all its members in every city to assist the public libraries and bookstores in arranging for health book publicity during April. The Council endorses the effort to get broader distribution for sound health literature as part of its year-round program to arouse public interest in health problems. In many cities a health evening will be held in public libraries during April, with standard and popular health books on display and addresses by prominent members of health organizations, school principals, city health officials and librarians.

From the National Health Library, 370 Seventh Avenue, New York, a list of popular books on health and health books for the family can be obtained free, as well as a health bibliography from the American Public Health Association which is at the same address for four cents postage.

The Question of Book Paper

CAN books of permanent importance be manufactured in two editions so that there will be a rag paper edition for permanent record as well as another edition for general sale? This question has been raised before by reference libraries and discussed again by H. M. Leydenberg, chief reference librarian of the New York Public Library, in a book entitled "Paper or Sawdust"—A Plea for Good Paper for Good Books," written for the Paper Manufacturers' Educational Association, Inc. of Philadelphia, in advertising a brand of B. R. 100% rag book paper. Mr. Leydenberg knows the question of the preservation of books thoroly, and his library has continuing problems to solve in preserving its material. In part, the case as he states it is as follows:

"If books are to endure, they should be printed on paper that will last. If they are printed for a passing purpose, better save good paper for good books. Printer and publisher should consider the kind of use the book is to get when they select the kind of paper it is to be printed on.

"Why, that is so obvious it scarcely needs expression!

"Perhaps, my friends. But did you ever look at some much used books of reference in a busy library? You can not get a better test than that. . .

"What is to be done?

"Someone, everyone, connected with books—users, readers, producers, makers, distributors—must insist, in season and out, that books of permanent value and interest must be printed on paper that will last, honest rag-stock with never a trace of wood pulp in it. The paper-maker must have, or cultivate, sufficient pride to develop a stock that can be sold within the bounds of reason. The printer must prove to the publisher that really good work deserves good paper, and that the difference between the cost of wood-pulp stock at ten to fifteen cents a pound and an all rag stock at twenty to twenty-five cents means not more than ten to fifteen cents on each book, or $100 to $150 per thousand copies. The buying public must support the printers and publishers who see the need and the opportunity and who are willing to do their share. The far-sighted publisher will see that a few copies are run off on a good rag stock, if he does not print the whole edition on this paper, and that three copies are deposited in carefully selected libraries where he may have reasonable assurance the scholars and investigators of the next generation will have their needs met by books and service. He will see that it is as wise for him to provide insurance of this kind as it is to carry insurance against fire or accident."

The title of this pamphlet seems a little misleading, as "sawdust" would seem to indicate that books were made on ground pulp paper, tho, of course, they are not, but paper from chemical pulp for which the fibers have been loosed by chemical action. The paper is quite generally made from vegetable fiber, whether it be the fiber of flax, the fiber of esparto grass, or the fiber of trees. The fiber of trees is more difficult to disentangle from its impurities than flax, and the quality and durability of the paper are largely dependent on how successfully these fibers are prepared.

The best paper from wood is a mixture of pulp prepared by the soda process and pulp prepared by the sulphite process, which have their own different virtues.

Whether it would be possible to get support for a double printing with its extra expense of make-ready would be a problem that would have to be worked out practically by experiment. Certainly the data as to the length of life in the paper which can be collected from the library's experience is of great importance to authors, publishers and the public.

The Bookshop on an April Day

By Grace Raine

Out thru the window I can see
The April sunshine gloriously,
It paints my books all red and gold,
My bookshop is no longer cold
But full of colors warm and bright
That makes it just a lovely sight,
And so the whole place seems to me
A home of peace and mystery.
Then I forget the busy day,
And books and folk seem far away,
And drudgery and working hours
Are lost in thoughts of April flowers.

The Community's Health

THE publicity of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company is well worth careful study, and its recent report has a special significance to the book-trade at a time when health books are being emphasized in many stores. Some of the facts there are as follows:

The Company can base its records on a study of 22,000,000 policyholders, and it can report a 32% decrease in the mortality rate in 13 years. The tuberculosis mortality has, in this period, been reduced 53% among the Company's policyholders, typhoid 80% and diphtheria 53%. The fact that these percentages are higher than the general decrease thru the country is attributed largely to the Company's energetic health and welfare work on which it spent over $3,000,000 last year. This program included distribution of health literature, health advertisements, trained nurse visiting, and the showing of films on health matters.

Two important things have been accomplished by this program: the Company has made such a definite contribution to the community's welfare that a vast cumulation of good will toward the Company has been built up; it has also served its own business interest well, because the number of death benefits paid has decreased, and, with the decreased cost thus arrived at, more policies can be sold.

The bookseller has the same good reasons for taking an active part in the spread of good health literature: he can build good will in the community for important work done; at the same time, he can increase his own business in a satisfactory department.

The greatest caution should be exercised that the opportunity is thus taken and that the material distributed is the best available. Guides to the best health literature may be had from the list published by the Public Health Association at 370 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

Binding Strike in London

A BINDERS' strike which started in the shop of the Grey-Caine Co., with workmen on combined printing and binding machines, has spread to the entire trade and tied up book making in London.

Bookselling on the Floor

Sixth Lecture of Course in Retail Bookselling

THE sixth lecture of New York City College's course in Retail Bookselling was given by Mr. Margolies of Brentano's, and was on selling books on the floor.

"A good sales force," said Mr. Margolies, "is one interested in a variety of subjects." It is well to encourage specializing among your force. Let one know poetry, another psychology, still another art and so on. This does not mean a person's confining himself to one subject; it does mean his knowing that one so thoroly that he can answer any question that might be asked about it. This will also mean the development of a clientele of his own, and it's the clientele that pays. Transients may or may not buy; the clientele is dependable.

The bookseller, no matter how general a knowledge of books he may have, is of no use if he cannot handle customers. Nor can it be said that a person with ability to handle customers is of much use in a bookstore if he does not know the inside of books as well as the stock. There are many ways of doing this, even if you are not a reader. In many of the newspapers there is, daily, a column or two devoted to reviews and discussions of books, and on Saturday or Sunday they have elaborate literary sections. Many magazines and journals are devoted entirely to book reviews and literature. You can even get a general understanding of English book activities thru the London Times and the Nation and Athenaeum.

These reviews give you a knowledge of the new books without allowing you to come actually in contact with them. Brentano's has what is called a New Book Shelf where a copy of every new book is placed as soon as it comes in. Not only do the sales people become used to going over the shelves, but the customers learn to make it the first point they visit when entering the store. Besides this, Brentano's has a card catalog which admits of a knowledge of all books in the store.

These means of becoming acquainted with books are of necessity confined to present-day literature. You know how to get for a customer any modern book he might ask for. "Booksellers, however, do not," said Mr. Margolies, "appreciate the 'Books Wanted' Columns of the Publishers' Weekly and other papers, which enable you to get hold of out-of-print books which customers want."

Division into departments of the several specialties enables you to run them as separate stores. Considering them as such there are two ways of classifying the books on the shelves. One is by publisher, the other by author. The latter is by far the simpler, the author being, of course, generally known—certainly, more often than the publisher.

In closing, Mr. Margolies said that he thought bookseller-to-customer telephoning should be greatly encouraged. By this he meant the reporting to a customer of some book which has come in and which the seller thinks would be of interest. It generally results in a sale, and pleases the customer to think he is remembered. This can also be done with post-cards, tho with not as much satisfaction.

Authors and Publishers

Part IV

Types of Author

MUCH of the disagreement that arises between authors and publishers is due less to a conflict of general interest than to a difference of perspective. Authors are—a vast majority of them—highly intelligent people, and quite able to realize that a publisher helps their books in helping himself. Few, indeed, really believe that the writer's interest and that of the honorable exploiter of literary work are anything but identical. In such circumstances one might look for perpetual harmony between the artist and his entrepreneur—a harmony disturbed, maybe, from time to time by trifling disagreements as to method, but in the main persistent, if monotonous.

Nevertheless, monotony is the last quality noticeable in the relation of author and publisher. Such relation is sometimes enchanting, often agreeable, but always vivid. And the explanation lies surely in this very problem of a differing perspective.

An author lives in and for one book written by himself; a publisher lives among and by a lot of books written by other people. Here is inevitable conflict. To an individual author the prosperity of the other titles in his publisher's list is of secondary importance. He admits, of course, that if his publisher does well with the block of books to which his own belongs, the group-prosperity helps him individually. But such (as it were) communal enthusiasm is naturally weaker than his desire for the triumph of his own particular book. The publisher, on the other hand, has twenty books to sell, and (to put matters on the lowest level) serves his own purpose best by selling all twenty equally well. Higher considerations influence him in the same way. His duty is to twenty authors. Each has a right to attention and to publicity. He cannot, therefore, either in honor or in interest, neglect eighteen of these books and concentrate on two.

It may be suggested, therefore, to authors and to publishers that they keep perpetually in mind this difference in their mutual absorption.

The publisher, harried by detail, torn between the miscellaneous activities of his most miscellaneous job, comes easily to irritation with the author who writes incessant notes of query or suggestion; who calls (without an appointment) and sits an hour talking about himself; who finds a bookseller in a country town that has not got a copy of his book or books; who counts the inches in the press given to someone else's novel (whether by his own publisher or by a rival), and complains that he himself is insufficiently advertised. But irritation, however natural, is unreasonable. Let the publisher remember that the author must set his book above all other books, because, having sweated blood to make it good, he longs for it to have a proper chance as fiercely as ever a mother could require her child to have fair opportunity. Further, let the publisher remember that the author knows more of his own book than can any one else, and that his opinion as to the most likely method of publicity may (for all its technical crudity and impractical finance), have in it the germ of the real idea which alone can vitalize the advertising of any book. Finally, let the publisher remember that his personal intelligence and reliability will count in his favor with the genuine author more abidingly than will lavish payment, exaggerated compliment, or frantic publicity. The publisher-author may be a nine days' wonder to the book-trade: his foolish checks may give the literary agents their Three Intoxicating Weeks; but unless he is of the same mental quality as are his leading authors, he will not hold their loyalty when winter comes.

Are authors as a class unreasonable? On the whole they are the very opposite—provided allowance is made for their absorption in their own books, and their indifference to (almost their dislike of) those of other people. Even when they seem most captious they err from ignorance rather than from malice. For example, they seldom realize the processes of publishing, a lack of understanding that produces one very trying quality—impatience. Each writer wants his book published with special urgency, and the long period that frequently elapses between the passing of the final proof and the appearance of the volume on the bookshop counters is a perpetual mystery and irritation to him. It is, however, a curious phenomenon that the most impatient authors are usually the most unprofitable. Best sellers do not worry. They are either enthusiastic allies to their publishers, or from villas in the South of France send a languid postcard now and then. Not so the eager but improbable nonentity. He does not share the publisher's conviction that he is lucky to be published at all. He wants a gilt top or an outsize of paper, and chafes when he is told that the former costs a little extra, and the latter means delay. If his book is not immediately reviewed, he telephones the publisher to know the reason why. Truly he is often difficult to bear with patience, demanding as he does so much of an already crowded working day, showing so little of result. But even such a man as this responds to kindness and to courtesy, for, save in the rare cases when intransigence is genuine ill-nature, he is only fighting forlornly for his child and is pathetically ready to be convinced that the publisher will really act the foster-father to the babe, and not the wicked uncle.

These few lines are a fitting postscript to an essay (however cautious) on Types of Authors. They also balance in a pleasing manner the examples given earlier of publishers' brusquerie in dealing with authors and illustrators. The old days were not all savagery. In 1818 the sprightly Lady Morgan (she who had been Miss Owenson), sent to her publisher, Colbrun, a new novel, "Florence MacCarthy." Colbrun was so entranced by the tale that he presented the author with a parure of amethysts. Whether the gift was in lieu of advance royalties history does not relate; the incident has, however, both its charm and its menace. A dangerous precedent. . . . Something more to be added to the percentage of overhead charges. . . . At the January sales we shall lay in vanity bags, cigarette holders and yards of crêpe-de-chine. Who wants amethysts anyway?

"The House Without a Key" Prize Contest

THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY announces a prize contest in connection with its novel "The House Without a Key," by Earl Derr Biggers, author of "Seven Keys To Baldpate." The prizes are offered for selling suggestions of any sort—sales talk, slogan, advertising copy or design, display stunt, publicity, etc. The prizes are a fifty-dollar wrist watch for the best suggestion from a woman and a fifty-dollar wrist watch for the best suggestion from a man. Competitors must belong to the book-trade, must be proprietors or employees of houses that sell books at wholesale or retail. Any competitor may submit as many suggestions as he pleases. Suggestions must be mailed by April 15 to the Prize Editor, The House Without a Key, The Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis, Indiana. No suggestions mailed after April 15 will be considered.

The Book Hunter

What He Was Asking for During March

AN analysis of books advertised for during the month of March brought to light some interesting if not new ideas in book collecting. As is shown by the analysis printed below, Mark Twain is the author whose books are most sought after by the rare bookseller. Cabell, contrary to the opinion held by many when he first came into collecting prominence, is still in good demand at second place. H. L. Mencken is at fourth place, while Edgar Allen Poe and R. L. Stevenson are at the end of the list. There appears to be a conspicuous absence of most of the old nineteenth century "standbys" in the list, excepting Hawthorne.

In making the list of the books most in demand other facts were brought forth. There is a brisk demand for Godey's Ladies Book and Peterson's Magazine. The first two issues of the Golden Book, a new magazine, are advertised for. The American editions of many of Dickens' works are wanted. General Americana is still heavily advertised for.

Philadelphia Booksellers

THE Booksellers' Association of Philadelphia held its annual "Ladies' Night" in the North Garden of the Bellevue-Stratford Tuesday night, March 17. A large proportion of the membership turned out to hear the several speakers of the evening and to enjoy the dancing which followed the dinner. Mrs. Pearl Keating, chief scenario reader for Warner Brothers, who have specialized in film versions of well-known novels—among them "Brass," "The Beautiful and the Damned" and "The Narrow Street"—gave a spirited explanation of the methods by which stories are selected for screen production. She also spoke of the amusing and exasperating experiences that the producers sometimes have with the various boards of censorship and the odd things that come up in dealing with actors, authors and exhibitors. Mrs. Elizabeth Stancy Payne, author of "Lights Along the Ledges," "Fathoms Deep" and other novels dealing with coast-wise shipping and the lighthouses that safe-guard it, directed attention to the romance attached to the great system of maritime protection that warns sailors against the perils of rock and shoal along the Atlantic. Mrs. Emile R. Loring, author of "A Certain Cross Road," spoke of her work as a writer of novels and of her ambition to help humanity attain its ideals in the field of romance as well as in the more prosaic realm of every day life. Besides the authors who addressed the booksellers the guests included Stanley Hart Cauffman, author of "At the Sign of the Silver Ship"; George Marsh, writer of "The Valley of Voices," and other tales of the Northwest; Roy Helton, author of "The Early Adventures of Peacham Grew"; Edwin Bateman Norris, whose "Narrow Street" in its film version was one of the best reviewed pictures of last year; Edward Shenton, author of "The Gray Beginning," and Sidney Williams, author of "Mystery in Red"; Walter K. Taylor, president of the Booksellers' Association, presided.

Copies of "A Certain Cross Road" by Emile R. Loring and "Uncle Sam Needs a Wife" by Ida Clyde Clark were presented to the audience thru the courtesy of the Penn Publishing Co. and the John C. Winston Co.

Practical Business Hints From Other Bookshops

One dollar paid for each contribution found suitable for this page. They should be briefly stated and practical.

SEVERAL booksellers have discovered that the inside flap of the wrapper for books in the circulating library give space for two or four advertisements which space can be sold to nearby shops, such as a gift shop or a tearoom, and that the return from these advertisements will pay for the wrapper or permit a better quality wrapper to be used. The use of a distinctive color for a circulating library wrapper is a very common practice, as people get to noticing this color and associate the shop with the person who may be carrying one of the books.

SUSPEND a thin paper Bible by one leaf in connection with a window display of Bibles. Passersby always stop to marvel at the strength of the best thin paper. It is a good testimony, also, to the durability of the sewing.

HAVE you thought of this? That customers need to be persuaded that they have uses for books rather than that they ought to buy certain books. That they have a use for books as Easter gifts or as graduation gifts; that they have a use for a flower book, a garden book or a golf book. When they realize that the need is theirs, the books which meet the need are at hand.

A CERTAIN portion of every bookman's time is taken up during the day in arranging and keeping clean the stock. Everybody realizes the importance of this good shopkeeping! There are other parts of the store that require just as much attention from the dust brush as the stock. One of the most important of these is the lighting system. Much light, money and general store efficiency is lost because the proper care of the lighting system is neglected.

This fact has been proved. A set of lamps was installed and half of these were removed in one week and taken to a laboratory and tested. The test showed that the dust the lamps had gathered in one week absorbed 16 per cent of the light. The lamps removed at the end of three weeks showed a 23 per cent loss of light. This loss did not cover the reflector loss where also dirt had collected.

Another test showed the following: the lighting system showed an intensity of 2.7. The reflectors were removed and washed and the intensity jumped to 3.7. New lamps were placed in the units and the intensity was raised to over 5. Then the walls were refinished, and the intensity ran up to 7. In this particular case the lighting system was delivering less than 40 per cent of its full capacity, and it could be traced directly to improper care. The lamps were wiped off occasionally, but were never removed and given a thorough cleaning. The tests were all made by the General Electric Company in the interests of lighting efficiency.

Regular cleaning will go a long way toward giving better illumination. In the average store the units should be cleaned approximately every two weeks, as tests show that the loss with this type of lighting averages about 14 per cent in four weeks.

Illumination thrown directly onto bookshelves conveys to the customers of a book shop an invitation to step over and examine the volumes, making classified stock more saleable.

Obituary

FRANK M. MORRIS

FRANK M. MORRIS, dean of Chicago rare bookmen, and one of the best-known bookmen in the United States, died on March 27th, at Chicago. Mr. Morris had been for nearly thirty-eight years a scholar, lover, and seller of books. During his long years in Chicago Mr. Morris had various locations for his shop, from an old basement in State Street, to his new and elaborate quarters at 208 South Wabash Avenue.

The location of his shop made no difference to his friends and customers, for wherever it was situated, there one would find informal gatherings of book lovers. An old and famous feature of the Morris shop was the Saturday Afternoon Club, composed in its day of numerous Chicago literary men. Among the many friends and patrons of the shop during its long years of existence were such well-known figures as Eugene Field, James Whitcomb Riley, Emerson Hough, Will Payne, George Ade, John McGovern, Biff Hall and Melville E. Stone. When Mr. Morris had been with the old McClurg bookstore, his department was known affectionately as the "Saints and Sinners Corner."

The Chicago Evening Post, writing of Mr. Morris on the occasion of his thirty-fifth anniversary as a bookseller said, "Mr. Morris has not only kept up the tradition of a noble profession but he has been a friend of every literary man and literary movement in the city, and if anyone ever attempts a history of literary Chicago or any thing of that sort, he will find Mr. Morris one of his best and most willing sources of information. Meanwhile, we hope that Mr. Morris will find that the first thirty-five years are the hardest and that as he enters into his second thirty-five year lap the rewards of constancy will begin to come in with every increasing frequency."

"This the robber, as sure's you're born
Against whose guile I fain would warn
The bibliomaniac, tattered and torn,
Who pauses to look at some second-hand book

That lies on the shelf all covered with dust
And is marked 'Four Dollars for Cash—
No 'Trust.'

Canadian Publicity Director Ready

GRACE TREMEER, the executive selected by the Association of Canadian Bookmen to carry out the program of book publicity which has been underwritten by the Toronto publishers, has been spending a week in New York studying the methods and material of the National Association of Book Publishers.

Miss Tremeer has been doing book publicity at the Canadian office of Longmans Green & Co. under Mr. Pike and has made a very favorable impression on all who have met her.

In New York the records and specimen books of the five year campaign were opened to her and Miss Humble spent many hours in consultation on the application of the American experience to the Canadian problems. The two offices will be in constant touch with each other from now on.

Miss Tremeer also visited many bookstores and publishing offices and attended meetings of the New York Booksellers' League, the National Association of Book Publishers and a Bookselling lecture at the College of the City of New York.

The Weekly Record of New Publications

THIS list aims to be a complete and accurate record of American book publications. Pamphlets will be included only if of special value. Publishers should send copies of all books promptly for annotation and entry, and the receipt of advance copies insures record simultaneous with publication. The annotations are descriptive, not critical; intended to place not to judge the books. Pamphlet material and books of lesser trade interest are listed in smaller type.

The entry is transcribed from title page when the book is sent for record. Prices are added except when not supplied by publisher or obtainable only on specific request. When not specified the binding is cloth.

Imprint date [or best available date, preferably copyright date, in bracket] is always stated, except when imprint date and copyright date agree and are of the current year, in which case only "c" is used. No ascertainable date is designated thus: [n.d.]

Sizes are indicated as follows: F. (folio: over 30 centimeters high); Q (4to: under 30 cm.); O (8vo: 25 cm.); D. (12mo: 20 cm.); S. (16mo: 17½ cm.); T. (24mo: 15 cm.); sq., obl., nar., designate square, oblong, narrow.

Old and Rare Books

Edited by Frederick M. Hopkins

A COPY of Fanny Burney's "Evelina," the rare three volume first edition in the original half-calf binding, recently brought £65 at Hodgson's in London.

THE Beaumont Press has just issued its nineteenth publication, a volume of new poems, principally meditative, by Edmund Blunden, entitled "Marks of Time," limited to 390 copies, 310 on handmade and 80 on Japanese vellum.

AN extensive collection of the publications of the Kelmscott, Doves, Ashendene, Vale, Essex House and other special English presses, were sold in London last month, all bringing good prices. There is an active demand in London for finely printed and bound books, both for the English market and for sale in this country to collectors and the trade.

THE next three volumes of the "Bodley Head Quartos" will contain John Marston's "Scourge of Villainie," 1599, another early Shakespeare "allusion book," with an introduction by the editor, G. B. Harrison; Campion's "Observations on the Art of English Poetrie," 1602, bound up with Samuel Daniel's answer, "A Defence of Rhyme," 1603; and "Willoble his Avis," 1594, with an introduction in which the editor discusses the bearing of this "mystery" book upon the Shakespeare sonnet problems.

PUBLICATION of "Edgar Saltus, the Man," an intimate biography by Marie Saltus, his widow, previously announced by Pascal Covici to appear this spring, has been postponed until next fall. Arrangements are being made for magazine publication. Mrs. Saltus will appreciate copies of any letters written by her husband in the hands of collectors. Her address is Hotel Mark Twain, Hollywood, Cal.

STANDARD sets of American and English authors, many in editions de luxe, large paper, and in fine bindings; collected sets of first editions; extra-illustrated works and sets; rare first editions and illuminated manuscripts; and autograph letters and manuscripts of celebrities, the property of the Rev. Paul F. McAlenney of Hartford, Conn., with additions will be sold at the American Art Galleries April 14th and 15th. This sale contains 616 lots of carefully selected material and will make one of the most interesting of the season.

THE John Carter Brown Library of Providence has been taking its annual account of stock, the past year marking a period of two decades since this great private library of Americana was turned over to Brown University. The annual report shows that the ideals of twenty years ago, to secure every book relating to America produced before the year 1800, have been maintained. The most striking change has been in the growth of the library. In the two decades just concluded, 15,035 volumes, or half of the present collection, have been added.

THE leading article in the March Bookman's Journal is "St. Paul's in Peace and Peril, A Short Anthology from Chaucer to Machen," illustrated by several reproductions of rare prints. The frontispiece is a reproduction of an etching by Frank Brangwyn. The articles which follow include "Leigh Hunt in America, 1804-1818," by Gardner Teall; "James Elroy Flecker, Some Early Recollections," by T. Stanley Mercer; a review of "Limited Editions," by Roxburghe; and a continuation of the "Bibliography of George Bernard Shaw" which will be completed in the April number. The regular departments as usual are well filled with interesting note and comment.

THE article in the February Bookman's Journal on "Post War Publishing and the Edition-de-Luxe," which raised the issue that limited editions should, in fairness to subscribers, be really limited, has been widely commented on in England and America, and the consensus of opinion is that "Roxburghe," the author of the article, sounded a timely warning to collectors of so-called editions-de-luxe and limited editions. Collectors want, as they always have, editions-de-luxe, limited editions, and choice reprints. But they do not want to be imposed upon and this is what has been done in many cases by publishers whose books were not really limited, well made, or worthy reprints. Such books cannot run the gauntlet of the auction room. When they come under the hammer they fall flat, bringing only a small fraction of their original cost.

CABLEGRAMS from London last week reported that Dr. Rosenbach was the principal buyer at the Britwell Court library sale at Sotheby's. He paid £760 for William Langham's "The Garden of Health," a first edition printed in London in 1579. Other books bought by Dr. Rosenbach were a "Herbal," treating of the virtues and properties of herbs, London, 1525, £260; Conrad Heresbachius's "Fovre Bookes of Husbandry," newly Englished and increased by Barnabe Googe, black letter, first edition, London, 1577, £280; Thomas Hill's "A Brief and Pleasant Treatise Entitled Naturall and Artificiall Conclusions," black letter, first edition 1581, £360. These were only a few of the items reported, but later cablegrams stated that Dr. Rosenbach had made a pretty clean sweep of everything that was worth while.

SPORTING and historical colored plate books; first editions of Shelley, Dickens and Thackeray; manuscripts of Mrs. Browning, Mark Twain, and Stevenson; together with other rare and valuable books, selections from the library of Mrs. William A. Taylor of this city, the library of Andrew D. Baird, Jr., and other consignors, will be sold at the Anderson Galleries April 13th and 14th. Some of the rarer items include the first edition of Fanny Burney's "Evelina," in contemporary calf, 1778; the original manuscript of Mark Twain's "The $30,000 Bequest;" an author's presentation copy of Dickens's "Master Humphrey's Clock"; Meredith's

"Poems," 1851; a fine and complete set of The Scourge, with colored plates by George Cruikshank, 1811-1816; the first edition of Shelley's "Epipsychidion," 1821; a very fine copy of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair" first edition in the original parts, and many other rare items by the same author.

THE library of a New Jersey collector, containing 601 lots, containing many fine books and a few rarities, was sold at the Anderson Galleries March 23rd and 24th. Prices generally were good and the collection realized $18,530.50. A few lots and the prices which they brought were the following: Ainsworth's "Historical Novels," 30 vols., 12mo, half calf, London, 1878-81, $170; Burns's "Works," 6 vols., royal 8vo, morocco by Bayntun, Edinburgh, 1877-79, extra-illustrated by the insertion of 120 carefully selected plates, $150; collected set of first editions of Sir Richard F. Burton, 40 vols., various sizes, half morocco, London, 1851-84, $255; De-foe's "Novels and Miscellaneous Works," 20 vols., 12mo, calf by Root, Oxford, 1840-01, $180; Disraeli's "Works," 20 vols., 8vo, half morocco, New York, 1904, $155; Dumas's "Romances," 63 vols., 8vo, half levant, Boston, 1893-1903, $315; Lady Jackson's "Writings," 14 vols., 8vo, levant, London, 1878-90, first editions, $165; Stedman's "History of the Origin, Progress and Termination of the American War," 4 vols., 4to, half morocco, London, 1794, extra-illustrated, $245.

MORE than two centuries after it was drafted and adopted, the William Penn Charter of Liberties was restored last week to the people of the state. The document was originally drawn up in the office of William Penn's lawyer in London in 1682, concluded an arrangement with the Crown for the establishment of the Province of Pennsylvania. It was signed by Penn and others prominent in the Society of Friends on April 25th of that year. Penn submitted the charter to his new colony in the fall, and it was accepted by the people at the first Assembly, in Chester, and continued in force until the following year, when minor changes were found necessary, resulting in the drafting and signing of a second charter on April 2nd. The first charter was returned to Penn, who took it to England when he returned in 1684. It remained in the family for some time, but finally passed into the hands of Sir John Fenn. It was purchased in 1892 by Dr. Edward Maris, of Philadelphia, and remained in the possession of his family until 1902, when it was purchased by George C. Thomas. In the recent sale, in Philadelphia, of the George C. Thomas collection of autograph letters and manuscripts, it passed into the hands of Gabriel Wells of this city, who resold it to the people of Pennsylvania for a nominal advance. In a picturesque ceremony the worn parchment nearly 250 years old was presented to the governor of the Commonwealth to become a possession of the people of the State for all time. The purchase of the charter was arranged by the Philadelphia Public Ledger which raised $25,000 for the purpose. A total of 3,693 separate contributions were received. David E. Smiley, the editor of the Public Ledger made the formal presentation.

Among Those Dependable Writers

whose sales always show a high average, steadily increasing and whose novels
may be recommended without hesitation, is

GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL

Her Books Are An Investment Guaranteed by success after success, with never a failure. Her new story is unusually fine and appealing. In many stores the sale of Mrs. Hill's novels has increased over 100% during the past three years. All along the line there has been a very material advance in her popularity, due to dealer interest and our continuous publicity campaign for the Hill Books.

Mrs. Hill's Romances Are a Pledge of Joyous Entertainment, Unshadowed by Sex and Other Spectres of Fiction—They Deserve Your Best Efforts — Give Them Display Space and Reap a Good Profit.

THE NEW STORY tells what happened when a boy fell in love with a princess—for to Darcy Sherwood, uncared for and neglected, little Joyce Radway, in her delicacy and refinement, seemed nothing less. But once grown up, Joyce loses her kingdom and her faith in Darcy as well. Then come trials bravely mounted until at Darcy's need Joyce resumes her sway, only to find that Darcy justifies a new trust. It is a story with an especial appeal to women, few of whom can resist the delights of the enchanting house Joyce makes out of the deserted little land-office building. $2.00. Publication Date April 25th.
